Collaborations

Federation of Asia Veterinary Associations (FAVA)

The CVA was represented at the 21st FAVA congress in Fukuoka, Japan in November 2022 by Dr Jeff Cave. The CVA and FAVA renewed their Memorandum of Understanding, and many formal and informal discussions will serve to enhance each of our organizations activities in the years to come.

International Veterinary Students Association (IVSA)

The CVA also initiated discussions with the IVSA to establish a memorandum of understanding (MOU) with the aim of establishing linkages that would be of mutual benefits to the membership of both organisations. This is pertinent in this year as the Commonwealth of Nations celebrates the Year of Youth in 2023. Through this collaboration the CVA has launched an Essay Competition on Veterinary Sustainability targeted at Veterinary Students throughout the Commonwealth.

Vet Sustain

As a part of our on-going collaboration, Vet Sustain, together with their partner VetSalus, offered the CVA one free place on the on-line course entitled “A Veterinary approach to sustainable Food and Farming”, The value of the offer was £1500. In order to gain the most benefit from the offer for its members, the Executive decided to supplement this by extending the award to 3 (three) places on the course to eligible members, with the balance of funding being paid from the CVA StudyFund.

1.CVA Welfare Centre, Bangalore

The CVA has an MoU with the Karnataka Veterinary, Animal & Fisheries Sciences University, India (KVAFSU), since 2020, for the establishment of a KVAFSU-CVA Animal Welfare Research Center (AWRC) at the Department of Livestock Production and Management, Veterinary College, Bangalore, Karnataka, India, with the objective of carrying out research in animal welfare, behaviour and ethics.

Through this collaboration, an International Conference on Animal Welfare Research was held on 17-18 January 2023 in Bangalore, India under the theme: "Progress in animal welfare research: impact and opportunities" The Conference had a total of 200 participants which included international delegates from the UK, Netherlands, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Zambia.

Key Benefits of the conference were:

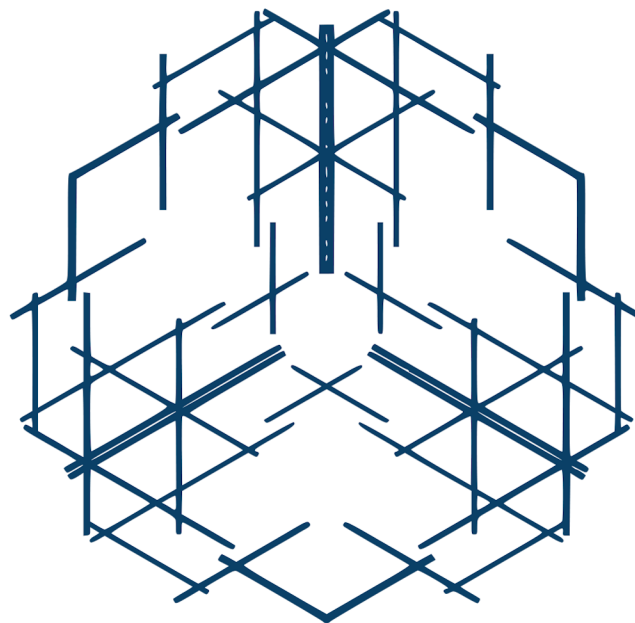

- The Conference brought research scientists and field-level functionaries working in the field of animal welfare onto a common platform for an exchange of views on various practical aspects of animal welfare.
- It provided an opportunity for animal welfare scientists from South-East Asian countries to exchange best practices and formulate common strategies to face animal welfare challenges.
- The interaction of PG students with senior animal welfare scientists from across the globe would motivate them to take up animal welfare topics as part of their postgraduate research.
- Developing research and training linkages between the participants.

Animal Welfare Training at JMICAWE

In order to strengthen the technical expertise on animal welfare at the AWRC, Dr. S. Abdul Rahman, Executive Director, CVA, sought the assistance of the Jeanne Marchig International Centre for Animal Welfare Education (JMICAWE), The Royal (Dick) School of Veterinary Studies, University of Edinburgh (JMICAWE) to train the staff at the Centre. Prof. Cathy Dwyer, Director, JMICAWE, designed a two-week training programme focused on acquiring knowledge and skills regarding the latest developments in animal welfare. Two faculty members, Dr. Vivek M. Patil and Dr. Mahadevappa D. Gouri, of the Department of LPM, Veterinary College Bangalore, India, were sponsored by the CVA with financial assistance from the Open Philanthropy Project. The training was organized from 31st November to 11th December 2022.

Key Benefits of this training were

Small Projects

Sustainable Village Poultry Keeping Project, Zambia

The CVA funded sustainable village poultry keeping project in Zambia concluded in May 2023. As a result of this project local villagers learned about improved nutrition, medication and husbandry for poultry and received seed stock of poultry to raise with their newfound skills and knowledge. Over the course of the project, villagers brought fertile eggs from their new flocks to be incubated and hatched and reared the new chickens. There remained some issues with mortalities and intermittent engagement by some participants. However, a significant number of the female participants showed commitment and demonstrated their new skills in raising poultry to the point where they can now transfer their knowledge to other women in their communities.

CVA Book Program

The Book Program has had another good year. There have been many generous donations from veterinarians in Australia and New Zealand. Most of the books that had been stored by the NZVA in Wellington are now in Australia, so there is now a single depot. This year books have been sent to veterinarians in Kenya, Tanzania, Nigeria and India. We have also had a generous $500 donation from Boehringer Ingelheim (thank you Glen Zahra!) which has helped pay for the postage costs to these countries.

Thanks to our book program officer, Jim Connah who continues to organize, collate, store and send donations of books and some equipment to our member countries. We are also very appreciative of the assistance (logistical and financial) from our sponsors for this program, IDEXX.

Veterinary institutions or private veterinarians who would like to receive any books are invited to email jimconnah@gmail.com for the current list of available titles.
